The Unlocking Current Issues series provides students with foundational understanding of timely topics related to current issues. The titles focus on a range of real-world issues, enabling students to make personal connections between what happens in the classroom and in society, to better understand controversies they see reported in the news, to read and think critically, and to differentiate fact from opinion. The topics also lend themselves to a wide range of classroom or small-group discussions, enabling students to demonstrate and build speaking and listening skills. Teachers should prepare themselves and their students to productively engage in discussions on controversial social issues by becoming familiar with terminology, assessing students' maturity, and setting class norms regarding what types of comments and topics are acceptable. Disability Experience presents essays on 200 narrative works written by persons with disabilities, dating from the 15th century to 2018. The disabilities covered are mostly physical, but psychological/psychiatric conditions, developmental/intellectual impairments, and addiction are also included. While most are written by disabled persons themselves, a small number of biographies and family memoirs (such as those written by parents or spouses) were included. One-third of the works are by non-US authors. Care was also given to represent a wide range of other cultures, heritage, and lifestyles, in areas such as religion, sexual orientation, gender identification, color, and other factors that, along with disability, constitute intersectional experiences.
